

TED Presentation

Objective: You've been asked to give a TED-style presentation next week. TED originally stood for "Technology, Entertainment, and Design", but now centers on ideas worth spreading. In the next week, you've been tasked with developing an 18 minute presentation on something you are incredibly passionate about. Something you think the whole world should know more about so that they can be as excited about it as you. What can you talk about /share for hours and never get tired? What do you feel competently educated on that you could talk about or share with others? Assuming you have no problem speaking/performing/sharing in front of an audience, what would you share? What idea would you like to spread?
